Description: This one-and-a-half-story Craftsman bungalow has a full-width entry porch sheltered by the main gable roof overhang that is supported on two squat square tapered wood-cased columns resting on brick masonry piers. The central entry stairway retains its original stair cheeks. The gable attic has a pair of wood-sash windows. The house is sheathed with cedar shingles and the eaves and bargeboards are supported by knee brackets.

Cultural Data: Elizabeth McClure was the widow of Horace McClure (1866-1928), a writer for the 100 percent Club. William Latshaw Home (1888-1960), a young mining engineer, and his wife Edgarda MacMullen Home (1888-1957), moved to Seattle in 1939 and lived in this house by at least 1940. During his career, Home worked for the Army Engineers and the Reconstruction Finance Co. The tragedy of the Homes' life played out in the Seattle Times, as the Homes lived out their quotidian life, entering guessing games regarding sporting events (1939), and watching their son, Justus, graduate from West Point (1941), followed by his promotion to Army captain in 1943. Justus was killed in Italy in 1944 at age 24 in a training exercise one week before he was due home on leave to visit the son he had never met.
