Description: This one-story side gable Craftsman bungalow has a recessed entry porch sheltered by the main roof overhang that is supported by a pair of squat square tapered wood-cased columns resting on brick masonry piers. The central entry stairway retains its original stair cheeks and the porch guardrail is composed of square vertical balusters. The entry doorway has an original wood-sash tripartite window with upper leaded-glass transom on its southern side. There is a small intersecting gable roof on the northern side of the street façade. This section of the house also has an original wood-sash tripartite window with upper leaded-glass transom.

Cultural Data: William F. Holmes (1883-1972) was a florist. William F. McCue was the president of W. F. McCue Mercantile Company in 1920. Earle S. (ca. 1887-1971) and Sophie Z. Colvin (d. 1954) lived in this house for at least 30 years; they are representative of the stability of the neighborhood. Earle worked as an accountant for Price Waterhouse. Scandal rocked the Colvins' placid existence in 1940, when their daughter Virginia was granted a divorce from Charles L. Bushell of Salem, Oregon, who was accused of cruelty and inhuman treatment.
