Description: This one-story side gable Colonial Revival bungalow originally had a recessed porch on the northern side of the street façade with the porch edge supported by a Tuscan column. The entry doorway is flanked by wood-sash double-hung windows. The southern side of the façade had a simple gable roof over a wood-sash tripartite window with upper divided-lights. The entry stairway retains its original brick masonry stair cheeks. The house is sheathed with horizontal bevel siding and all roofs have eave returns. While some first-floor detailing was retained, the house was substantially remodeled in 2007 by extending the main roof upward and adding a second story with gabled dormer.

Cultural Data: George P. Endert (1882-1942) was the president of the Victory Rubber Company in 1920, as well as working for a motion picture film company.
