Description: This one-and-a-half-story intersecting gables Colonial Revival house has a prominent gable roof the northern side of the main street façade with a secondary has a projecting gable roof entry supported on a pair of Tuscan columns and partially recessed entry porch. Near the center of the façade is a tripartite window flanked by narrow two wood-sash windows. The gable end has a non-original group of four windows with divided lights. The house is sheathed with horizontal bevel siding and all roofs have eave returns.

Cultural Data: Duane Miner (?-1966) was a salesman for Puget Mortgage Securities Company. Ragnar A. Roscoe (1885-1941), a young mechanical engineer from Norway, immigrated to Seattle in 1907. He lived in a boarding house with nine others while he tried to get a foothold in America by doing day labor in the oil industry. By the time he died, he owned Roscoe Manufacturing Company, was a Ravenna homeowner, and an esteemed member of several local social clubs, including the Sons of Norway. The Haynes family had two sons: Marine Lt. Col. Robert M. Haynes, a Bronze Star-designee in 1952 for service in Korea and Japan, and James who later followed in his brother's footsteps and joined the Navy ROTC.
