Description: This two-story Dutch Colonial Revival has a central gable roof entry porch supported on a pair of square wood-cased columns and flanked by two original wood-sash double-hung tripartite windows. The second floor has a single centrally placed original wood-sash double-hung window flanked by two pairs of original wood-sash double-hung windows. The house has painted horizontal clapboard. The southern end of the house has a flat roof sunroom with original wood-sash windows on three sides. This form of Dutch Colonial Revival house has faux gambrel roofs on each side.

Cultural Data: Thomas James Hocking (1883-1960) was a fuel dealer. His wife Hattie (1888-?) was socially active in the community, hosting meetings at the house for the St. Martin's Mother's Club, the Order of the Amaranth, the Colonial Club, and the Ruth School for Girls. Bert Creighton (1896-1975) was a naval pilot holding the rank of commander in 1944. He served as a pilot in both in WWI and WWII. His wife lived in Seattle for only a short time.
