Description: This one-story Colonial Revival bungalow has a recessed entry porch on its northern side sheltered by the main roof overhang and supported by two framed square columns originally framing a small projecting balcony. Originally there was a simple gable attic dormer above the porch that was removed at some time. On the southern side of the street façade is a group of four wood-sash 18-light casement windows. The southern façade has a large gable roof with a brick masonry chimney intercepting the hip roof. The house is sheathed with cedar shingles. The ca. 1919 carport is shared with 6312 23rd Avenue NE.

Cultural Data: Earl A. Lightner (1897-1965) was secretary-treasurer of the Lumbermen's Printing Company in 1930. Charles L. Rehkopf (1917-1999) and his wife Mary Imogene (née Sampson, 1923-?) lived in this house for the latter half of the 20th Century. Rehkopf was an engineer.
